The Real Secret Of Giving

“We have not learned how to give, many of us. We have wanted too much. The thought is if I give, how is it going to benefit me? If we do learn how to give, then much of the world’s discord, strife and unhappiness will be eliminated. But to give with the thought of getting will not help matters, for then giving becomes a matter of bookkeeping. However, to give to the utmost, not of money alone but of self, without any thought whatsoever of compensation, enables one to find real happiness, satisfaction and enjoyment.”

“Another thing about giving, and here the real test of character comes in, is the giving up, the sacrificing, in order to give. It is no credit to a man to give away that of which he has plenty, but if it pinches and perhaps hurts him that he may give, then he has found the real test.”

“The man who gives in proportion to his income, no matter how small, and increases his gifts as his income increases, has discovered the real secret of giving.”

“Giving is a test of character, and must be learned. One cannot inherit it; it is a habit to be acquired. The man who can give and does not, is starving his soul. For such a man I have not contempt but pity. He hasn’t learned how, that’s all.”
